

When Asya met Volkan, she was alone in her own world. Her parents passed away when she was quite young. Although they left her a hefty inheritance, Asya had no family to call her own. Volkan changed all that after he proposed her and just after she finished medical school, they settled in Volkan's home town: a small city near İstanbul. Volkan's family became hers, and his friends became her friends. On this foundation, they built a happy marriage and raised their son, Ali in this loving household Asya had always dreamed of.

Years later, Asya's medical practice was thriving and Volkan's construction business seemed growing. Life couldn't be better — until Asya found that long blonde hair on Volkan's scarf. She discovers that Volkan has an affair with a young woman, Derin. Worse, she finds out that all their friends and people around her knew about this relationship, but no one ever told her. Compounding these multiple betrayals, Asya finds out that Volkan's business has eaten up her inheritance and left the family with huge debts.

Volkan, on the other hand, has complicated feelings. He feels that he both loves Asya and Derin. He sees Asya as his family, Derin as his love. He has no intention to give up on his family but he doesn't have the courage to break up with Derin too.

Asya realizes that she has been living in a web of lies. When the details behind the betrayal rise to the surface, everything begins to go into motion... In this story, Asya refuses to be a victim of her life and she dedicates herself to get her revenge on her husband and everyone else who betrayed her.
